Definitions:	The “ BioGro Licensee ” is the company which is certified by BioGro New Zealand Ltd to produce and sell organic products under the terms of the BioGro Organic Production Standards 2009, plus amendments, and which subcontracts some or all aspects of their production, handling or storage to the Sublicensee. The “ Sublicensee ” is the company contracted by the BioGro Licensee to produce, handle or store organic products on behalf of the BioGro Licensee.
Background:	This agreement is required by BioGro New Zealand under the terms of its certification of the BioGro Licensee and their product(s). It is additional to any commercial agreement between the BioGro Licensee and the Sublicensee. Any other such agreements shall also be made available to BioGro New Zealand.
Certification Status:	BioGro approval of the Sublicensee’s operation does not allow the Sublicensee to represent themselves as BioGro certified. Organic status is limited to the operation completed on behalf of the BioGro licensee only. The Sublicensee cannot use the BioGro name or trademark in any way other than to apply it to the BioGro Licensee’s products.
Product Ownership:	The BioGro Licensee retains ownership and control of the organic product. The Sublicensee will not offer for sale any product produced under the terms of this agreement.
BioGro Standards:	The Sublicensee will obtain and familiarise themselves with the relevant modules of the BioGro New Zealand Organic Production Standards 2009, plus amendments. The Sublicensee agrees to comply with all requirements of these Organic Production Standards.
Access for Audit:	The Sublicensee will allow BioGro access to their facility, and provide all materials and records reasonably requested by BioGro as part of its audit programme.
